Annual Report

Thank You!

A Message from Guatemala

As we reflect on the journey we have shared throughout this year, we want to express our deepest gratitude for the invaluable support, trust, and commitment you have shown to CAUSE Guatemala and the communities we serve.

Thanks to your solidarity and generosity, we have been able to continue advancing a program that strengthens the economic development and empowerment of women and families living in vulnerable circumstances. Your support has been essential in bringing hope and opportunities to those who need them most.

In Guatemala, we continue to face significant social and economic challenges. However, having a partner like CAUSE Canada has enabled us to respond more effectively and with greater commitment to the needs of rural communities. Every project we have undertaken reflects the positive impact of a partnership built on trust, respect, and a shared vision of creating a more dignified future.

We deeply appreciate the dedication of the entire CAUSE Canada team, as well as the efforts of every donor, partner, and volunteer who makes this mission possible. Your support goes far beyond assistance; it represents hope, transformation, and new opportunities for hundreds of Guatemalan families.

On behalf of the entire CAUSE Guatemala team, we extend our most sincere thanks.

We look forward to continuing to strengthen this valuable partnership so that together we can keep creating lasting, positive change in the lives of the people and communities we serve.

Please accept our very best wishes for your continued well-being and success, with the confidence that together we will continue building a future filled with opportunity and hope.

With heartfelt gratitude,

Doyla Maricelda Juan Pablo

Highlights

Former CAUSE Canada beneficiaries and team members continued to take on influential leadership roles in Sierra Leone. Among them is the current Minister of Gender and Children's Affairs, who began her career with CAUSE Canada supporting women affected by the civil war.

Two rural communities in Sierra Leone independently operated school feeding programs initially established with CAUSE Canada, providing nutritious lunches every school day to 1,168 primary school students without external support.

Women in agricultural cooperatives in Sierra Leone nearly quadrupled their average monthly income, from approximately $22 to $84 CAD, after receiving training in climate-smart agriculture.

Eighty-nine Indigenous Mayan Mam women in Guatemala graduated from the Microfinance Program after building businesses that no longer required program financing.

A new project helped 148 Honduran women strengthen their numeracy and business skills, gain confidence in managing their businesses, and make better-informed business decisions.

CAUSE Canada launched a seven-year initiative to help end child marriage in Sierra Leone, building on a trusted government partnership and engagement with the country's Vice-President.

In rural Sierra Leone, where secondary school completion rates for young women can be as low as 3%, CAUSE Canada helped 101 young women remain in school during 2025–26. Nine young women graduated from university, bringing the total number of CAUSE Canada-supported university graduates to 63.

In Guatemala, CAUSE Canada mobilized 241 community and faith leaders to promote healthy relationships and challenge the acceptance of violence against women and girls.

A Message from the Chair & Executive Director

Dear Friend,

Thank you.

Whether you gave a financial gift, shared our work with others, prayed for us, or encouraged our team, you helped make this year possible. Every achievement in this report reflects the generosity of people like you who believe that communities can build a better future when they have the opportunity and support to do so.

At a time when confidence in international aid is declining, Canadians are asking important questions: Does aid work? Is the change lasting? At CAUSE Canada, we see that aid works best when it helps people reclaim their dignity, build confidence, and develop the ability to move themselves and their families out of poverty. When people lead the solutions in their own communities, progress can continue long after our direct involvement ends.

Poverty is rarely caused by one challenge. Families often face many barriers at once. Girls may be forced to leave school. Women may struggle to access essential healthcare, affecting the well-being of their entire families. Child marriage can cut short a girl's education and limit her future. Deeply rooted beliefs can also prevent women and girls from contributing to decisions that affect their lives.

When these barriers begin to fall, women and girls are valued, heard, and able to shape their own lives with dignity. The effects also reach far beyond one person as women strengthen their families, contribute to their communities, and create new opportunities for the next generation. This is why investing in women and girls matters: every woman and girl deserves to live with dignity, and supporting her is one of the most effective ways to help families and communities overcome poverty.

At CAUSE Canada, we are committed to walking alongside the people who are too often overlooked or excluded. We begin by listening. We work with local communities to understand their challenges and develop community-led solutions rooted in their own knowledge and leadership. We measure and learn from what works, and adapt when something does not. This is how lasting progress takes root.

This year, we have once again been deeply moved by the courage and determination of the people we work alongside. The lasting imprints of this work can be seen in the knowledge and confidence people carry forward, and in communities where harmful beliefs and practices are beginning to change. These imprints remain long after a project ends, helping people continue building better futures without ongoing support from CAUSE Canada. The people we work alongside also leave lasting imprints on us, shaping how we understand our work and reminding us what is possible when we grow together.

As you read this report, we hope you will see more than projects and statistics. We hope you will see people gaining the capacity to move beyond extreme poverty, communities creating lasting change, and new opportunities taking root for generations to come. Thank you for choosing to stand with them. Your generosity, prayers, and encouragement make this work possible.

"The people we work alongside also leave lasting imprints on us, shaping how we understand our work and reminding us what is possible when we grow together."

Growing Together

Lasting Imprints

This year's report, Growing Together: Lasting Imprints, captures CAUSE Canada's work today.

Growth can mean many things. We see girls grow into young women, finish school, attend university, return to their communities, and help other children complete their education. These young women are not only growing up; they are multiplying the impact of our work. We help one person, and that person helps many more.

This growth is important. As international aid funding decreases, food insecurity, malnutrition, and extreme poverty are rising. We need to reach more people and deepen our impact. Funding is part of the solution, but we must also strengthen partnerships, share effective approaches, and pursue meaningful, long-term change. We must leave a lasting imprint on poverty.

At the heart of this work are the women, men, girls, and boys who participate in our programs. Each is unique. They leave imprints on our hearts and minds and inspire us daily. When given an opportunity, they transform their lives and the lives of their families and communities.

Poverty is not easy to solve. CAUSE Canada is therefore focused on innovative, community-driven solutions, particularly those addressing the barriers facing women and girls. Discriminatory laws and social norms, early marriage, caregiving responsibilities, limited access to education and health services, and violence constrain opportunities and deepen poverty across generations.

Effective solutions must be rooted in communities and led by the people who live there. Without community leadership, progress may be temporary. When change is community-driven it can be deep, meaningful, and lasting.

Our Focus

Support innovative, community-driven solutions.

Expand reach and deepen impact.

Pursue meaningful long-term change.

Every community has its own strengths, challenges, and solutions. The stories in this report reflect these distinct experiences while coming together to tell a larger story of community-led change. Each story leaves an imprint, helping us learn and grow together as we work toward lasting change.

Values

Dignity

We believe people are worthy to be valued and respected simply because they are humans.

Faith

We are motivated and guided by our faith in Christ to love and care for the most vulnerable and marginalized people.

Impact

We strive to maximize the quality of our efforts with the goal of effective, long-term, measurable, holistic transformation.

Equity

We believe in just and fair inclusion and that everyone should have the opportunity to reach their full potential.

Mission

Our mission is to break the cycles of extreme poverty among the most vulnerable populations by partnering and building capacity with marginalized communities.

Vision

CAUSE Canada envisions a world where all people are equally valued and have the opportunity to live free from extreme poverty.

Partnerships that Expand Impact

The Power of Partnership

Throughout 2025-26, CAUSE Canada's partnerships grew in both number and scope. We deepened our collaboration with community and faith leaders, other non-governmental organizations, governments, and intergovernmental organizations. These partnerships brought together local knowledge, technical expertise, resources, and evidence, allowing us to reach more people and make our work more effective.

This growing spirit of collaboration can be seen in three partnerships developed over the past year:

The World Bank and Sierra Leone's National Commission for Social Action

CAUSE Canada's years of experience developing community-led early childhood development models with UNICEF opened the door to a new partnership with the World Bank and Sierra Leone's National Commission for Social Action (NaCSA). Together, we piloted childcare centres in rural communities, enabling women to participate in the workforce while giving 372 young children access to quality early learning and a safe place to play. NaCSA and the World Bank have continued using the model and curriculum developed by CAUSE Canada as they expand the project across rural Sierra Leone.

A new education partnership in Honduras

Changing political conditions in Nicaragua left another Canadian NGO with an effective model and funding to improve education for Indigenous and Garifuna children, but in need of a new location and implementing partner. CAUSE Canada was pleased to join the partnership and help bring this important work to communities in Honduras.

FUNDAP and CAUSE Guatemala

In Guatemala, FUNDAP works with rural Indigenous communities to improve agricultural productivity through training and support for farming and livestock. Recognizing the value of this expertise for women in our Microfinance Program, CAUSE Guatemala partnered with FUNDAP to provide borrowers with practical workshops and livestock vaccinations. This partnership is helping women protect their livelihoods and strengthen their businesses.

These are just three examples of how growing partnerships are helping CAUSE Canada extend its reach, strengthen its programs, and create greater impact. As the well-known proverb reminds us, "If you want to go fast, go alone. If you want to go far, go together." We want to go far, and we believe that working together is essential to creating change that lasts.

Local Ideas, Lasting Change

Community-led solutions create lasting pathways out of poverty.

For families in rural Honduras, Indigenous regions of Guatemala, and remote areas of Sierra Leone, opportunities to earn a reliable income are limited. Many women in these regions have low literacy, significant family responsibilities, and are daily challenged by gender inequality and insecurity.

Community-driven solutions that build on the strengths of local culture, resources, and people open new doors for women to learn, grow, and earn an income that feeds their families, sends their children to school, and can even help them leave poverty.

In Guatemala, CAUSE Canada continues to invest in microfinance programming that provides not only opportunities for women to access capital for their business but also financial and vocational skills to grow their businesses. This type of programming is rooted in the strong solidarity of the Indigenous Maya Mam communities.

In Honduras, in 2025-26, CAUSE Canada started the Women's Network Project to help women access capital already available in their municipalities for small business start-up. Without knowledge of the seed capital, how to access it, the skills to develop a business plan, or even the ability to count coins, these funds were completely cut off from the individuals who would most benefit from it. Now, the Women's Network Project is building the skills of women to access opportunities that already exist in their municipalities.

In Sierra Leone, basic business training and small seed grants are building on the strong cohesion of Mothers' Clubs in remote communities, helping women cycle capital among themselves, develop a village savings group, and grow their businesses. The Mothers' Club members decide the interest rates, which members of the group can borrow the capital, and the length of the loan. Mothers' Clubs are enabling women to develop innovative and collaborative ways to earn an income and to support their families and their communities.

Each solution is powerful but as unique as the community where they live. They also result in women's growing confidence, voice, and an opportunity to earn an income.

women benefited from training in small business management, basic financial literacy, and vocational skills.

208
women received small seed grants to start or build their businesses.

944
women benefited from microfinance loans.

Support innovative, community-driven solutions.

Ana's Story

A Second Chance to Learn

What began as a chance to gain practical skills has grown into newfound confidence, greater independence, and hope for the future.

Ana* lives in the community of El Aguacate, Quimistán, Honduras. Abandoned by her mother when she was little, and having lost her father in 2024, Ana lives with her grandparents. Out of financial need, she left school after the first grade to help her family. Leaving school meant she missed the opportunity to learn to read and write, along with the future opportunities continuing her education would have offered.

Now 16 years old, Ana has been helping with family expenses from the time she was 10 years old. She contributes to the family by selling fruit on the street: a task that presented challenges as she hadn't learned basic math skills like addition and subtraction, so struggled to know how to calculate change. Financial skills including calculating prices and managing expenses were also out of reach. Ana needed the help of her aunt to count money and understand how much she had earned each day.

Then, Ana participated in the Women's Network Project, and her life began to change. She learned how to add and subtract. She also learned valuable business skills such as product pricing and balancing expenses. Ana is now able to understand how much she earns, invests, and how much she needs to save to buy more products. More than gaining new knowledge and skills, Ana has also grown in confidence. She has discovered that not knowing how to read or write doesn't have to limit her ability to learn and move forward in life. She takes pride in the work she does and the contribution she is now making to her family.

"Before, I only sold because I had to. Today, I understand how my business works, and I know I can keep growing and achieving my dreams."

Ana, Honduras

Just like Ana, other women are being given new opportunities to learn and succeed through the Women's Network Project. Despite past barriers and obstacles, they are gaining skills, confidence, and new possibilities for their futures. When people have the opportunity to learn and build on their strengths, they can make choices, pursue new opportunities, and contribute to stronger families and communities and leave poverty.

Removing Barriers

Investing in girls means breaking down barriers.

When you invest in girls, you are helping remove more than one barrier. Poverty is rarely caused by a single challenge. Poor nutrition, limited access to education, and gender inequality work together to prevent girls and women from reaching their full potential. When girls are unable to stay healthy, learn, or complete their education, the effects extend far beyond one child. Families have fewer opportunities to break the cycle of poverty, and communities lose future leaders, teachers, healthcare workers, and entrepreneurs. Creating lasting change means addressing the interconnected barriers that keep girls from thriving.

CAUSE Canada focuses on solutions that create lasting benefits far beyond a single person or project: opportunities for multiplier effects.

For example, the Peer Literacy Program in Sierra Leone supports female secondary students to go to school and trains them to be tutors and mentors in an afterschool program for primary students in their communities. While one young woman is supported, about ten additional primary students improve their literacy skills. These young women's leadership is also reshaping the community's perception of the importance of girls' education. These young women are succeeding at school and helping their communities to also grow.

In Guatemala, communities are beginning conversations about the importance of keeping girls in school and creating futures that are less dependent on migration. Lasting support for girls' education needs to come from the community so girls can remain in school whether CAUSE Canada is working with the community or not.

Lastly, teachers are a critical component to ensuring quality education. In 2025-26, CAUSE Canada met this challenge by training 539 teachers in West Africa and Central America—ensuring that children have access to the quality education they need.

At CAUSE Canada, we look for local solutions that, with the right support, can grow and create even greater change throughout a community. Consistently we search for levers of change that, with a bit of support from CAUSE Canada, can go on to support even bigger changes in their communities.

Mothers' Clubs have been established and trained by CAUSE Canada since 2021.

2,529
girls have been directly supported by Mothers' Clubs to go to and stay in school.

11,414
children and adolescents benefited directly from CAUSE Canada's work to ensure all children have access to quality education.

Expand reach and deepen impact.

Mariatu's Story

Rooted in Community

When women are equipped with the tools to lead, the impact reaches far beyond their own families.

Mariatu was born in the small community of Yagala, Sierra Leone. Her roots run deep in a long lineage of farmers. Like generations before her, she grew up understanding the rhythms of the land and the importance of community. But her story would grow far beyond tradition to become a story of leadership, empowerment, and change.

When Mariatu was in her early 20s, an opportunity came that would reshape her future. CAUSE Canada invited her to join a newly formed Mothers' Club, a group designed to bring women together, build financial independence, and support girls at risk of dropping out of school. Girls who might otherwise face barriers due to lack of financial resources or limited opportunities after leaving school, were given new opportunities to find stability and community.

Today, Mariatu is a friend of CAUSE Canada but no longer directly participating in its programming. Instead, she is one of 15 dedicated members of her community's Mothers' Club. Together, they have built a thriving collective that strengthens their own livelihoods and uplifts their entire community. The group has grown their village savings fund to the equivalent of about $845 CAD by selling groundnuts, palm oil, rice, and vegetables. What began as modest contributions has grown into a financial safety net, and these resources are being put to good use.

The women have also become pioneers in their community. They are among the first local groups to formalize their savings and pay taxes. This is an important step toward financial recognition and stability. It also means having direct access and control over their finances for the first time in their lives.

Each year, Mariatu's Mothers' Club supports an average of five girls to stay in school and continue their education. Through the training,

"We are building a future, not just for ourselves, but for our daughters. When one of us grows, we all grow."

Mariatu, Sierra Leone

Mariatu and her peers learned how to identify these vulnerable girls and step in at critical moments. Their work is breaking cycles of poverty and opening doors for the next generation. Tangible change is being created through learning, opportunity, and women supporting other women and girls in their community.

At the heart of it all is a deep sense of connection. The women share more than financial goals; they share responsibility for each other's children, support one another through challenges, and celebrate each other's successes.

Foundations for the Future

Long-term Solutions for Healthier Lives

A community's ability to support maternal and family health is often shaped by circumstance beyond its control. Malnutrition, maternal and newborn mortality, and violence against women and girls cannot be addressed through short-term relief alone. By supporting community-led solutions, CAUSE Canada is building healthier lives and communities and creating lasting change.

In 2025-26, CAUSE Canada began a seven-year initiative to end child marriage and strengthen sexual and reproductive health systems in Sierra Leone. Child marriage is a form of violence that increases the risk of maternal and infant death while limiting a girl's education and future opportunities. By working with chiefs, religious leaders, and other influential community members, the project is building local commitment to protect girls and create lasting change.

In Todos Santos Cuchumatán, Guatemala, CAUSE Canada launched a community-led initiative to prevent violence against women and girls. Indigenous women, community and religious leaders, and local institutions developed solutions rooted in local language, culture, and community life. Religious leaders now include messages about violence prevention and respectful relationships in church meetings, pastoral counselling, and youth activities. Working through trusted leaders and existing community structures helps this work continue beyond the project's formal activities.

Communities in Sierra Leone are also addressing childhood malnutrition through We Eat What We Plant. The school feeding program helps communities work together to provide nutritious lunches, often the only meal a child receives that day. Now entering its third year, the program is expanding to new communities. Schools that participated during the first two years continue to provide lunches independently four days a week, even after CAUSE Canada's support has ended.

When local communities shape the response and trusted leaders carry it forward, a short-term project can become the foundation for long-term change. Communities are not simply receiving information or material support. They are learning, growing, and creating healthier futures for the next generation.

children, women, and men improved their health and well-being through CAUSE Canada programming.

3,072
children received a nutritious meal every school day.

421
women and men gained knowledge and skills to support healthier families and prevent violence.

Pursue meaningful long-term change.

Cruz's Story

A Path Forward

Trusted community leaders are helping build safer, healthier relationships.

Cruz* is an active member of the Catholic Church. He serves in the church's music ministry and participates in local community activities. In 2025, he joined a series of workshops designed to engage community and faith leaders in preventing violence against women in their homes and communities.

One of the most important lessons for Cruz was recognizing that family violence and violence against women have become so normalized that many families no longer recognize them as violence. Yet this violence can have profound effects on the health and well-being of individuals and families in his church.

Since participating in the project, Cruz has begun sharing these key messages during church meetings and community gatherings.

He encourages families to reflect on healthy relationships, seek help when violence occurs, and support those experiencing difficult situations. He believes faith leaders have an important responsibility to help communities talk openly about issues that are often kept silent.

Changing long-held beliefs takes time, but Cruz is encouraged by the willingness of community members to listen and engage in conversations that previously rarely took place. Through trusted local leaders like Cruz, communities are beginning to challenge harmful beliefs, support healthier relationships, and create safer environments where women and girls can live free from violence and participate in leading their families and communities out of poverty.

"People are listening, reflecting and becoming more open to these conversations. We still have a long way to go, but we are taking important steps toward preventing violence against women and building healthier relationships in our community."

Commentary on Financial Results

Revenue

In 2025-26, CAUSE Canada began the seven-year EmpowerHER Program in partnership with the Government of Canada, Global Affairs Canada (GAC). Additionally, it partnered with Change for Children, another Canadian NGO, to implement three years of the GAC-funded Intercultural Bilingual Education Program in Honduras.

International organizational funding included ECOWAS, Cooperación Española, and Bread for the World. At year-end, CAUSE Canada was in the process of entering into a new contribution agreement with Bread for the World which would result in increased funding for an additional three years.

Microfinance revenue, foundation and corporate revenue, and individual donations remained largely steady year-over-year. Event revenue decreased with the decision not to host a gala event in 2025.

Interest and miscellaneous revenue increased significantly in 2025-26 due to consulting services provided by CAUSE Canada to the World Bank.

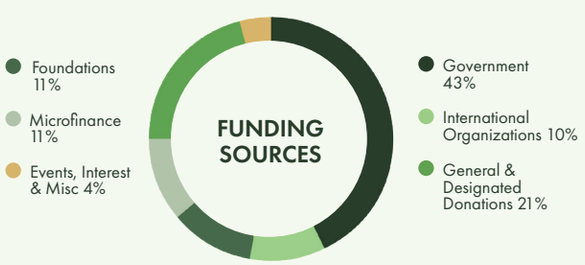

Expenses

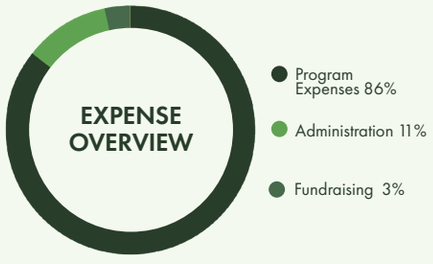

As funding from GAC grew, likewise expenses for these projects and their administration grew. International project costs increased over the last year with significantly more activities and the requirement for matched funding from CAUSE Canada.

While microfinance revenue remained stable year-over-year, related expenses decreased by 21%, due to efficiencies and effective resource management in the field.

As one of its three main objectives, expenses related to increasing efforts to involve Canadians in international development and solidarity increased and are expected to increase in the coming years.

Fundraising costs also increased in 2025-26 due to the implementation of an updated and more secure database for accurate tax receipting for donors.

What We Are Learning

Partnerships are complex, but they expand what is possible.

In 2025–26, CAUSE Canada worked with many new partners, including donors, community organizations, government ministries, and communities themselves. Each partnership brought different opportunities, perspectives, and ways of working. Together, we shared expertise and resources, supported community-led solutions, and expanded the reach and impact of our work. We will continue building partnerships and learning how to work together more effectively.

Scaling impact means more than growing our programs.

In 2025–26, we began expanding several proven approaches, including our work to end child marriage. We are learning that scaling requires careful listening, planning, adaptation, and measurement. Our goal is not to make CAUSE Canada bigger. It is to grow our impact by understanding how effective solutions can reach more communities, address more of the problem, and maintain their quality and impact as they grow.

Moving Forward

In 2026-27 we have some big goals.

1. Continue to design and test community-led approaches to preventing violence against women in Guatemala and expanding economic opportunities for women in Honduras.

2. Evaluate past CAUSE Canada projects to deepen our understanding of their long-term impact and apply what we learn to future work.

3. Scale initiatives in Sierra Leone to end child marriage and improve the lives of women and girls living with disabilities.

4. Help female farmers and farming cooperatives in Sierra Leone and Guatemala increase their incomes, feed their children and protect their livelihoods from unpredictable weather through climate-smart agricultural solutions.

5. Continue refining and advancing the most effective approaches to helping people facing the greatest barriers overcome poverty.

This report was printed on 100% recycled paper.

Through the values of faith, dignity, equity, and impact, CAUSE Canada partners with communities to help them break the cycles of extreme poverty.
